

Patty Rueter has been working in the emergency management field for 20 years. Currently she is the Emergency Planning Manager for the City of Portland and is responsible for coordinating public and private agencies in the development of comprehensive emergency plans for Portland and the region. A graduate from Portland State University with degrees in Urban Planning and Sociology, her focus has been building community resiliency by encouraging self-reliance, meeting basic needs and fortifying infrastructure.

Patty is affiliated with the public safety/emergency management committees of Central City 2035, the Portland Plan, Urban Area Security Initiative and oversees the development of the Local Energy Assurance Plan, the 2010 Natural Hazard Risk Reduction Strategy and all hazard and functional plans of the City.
